◆ African Region Peer Health Education Programme in Partnership with the Australian Government (GCYDCA)

GCYDCA, with financial support from the Australian Government through the Australian High Commission in Pretoria, has embarked on a Peer Health Education programme that will cover Uganda, Kenya, Tanzania, Mozambique, Malawi, Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland, Zimbabwe and Zambia. The programme is expected to spread to other countries within the first half of 2012.

Peer Health Education has been identified as a reliable and sustainable initiative that countries can use as a mitigation strategy on various impacts of HIV & AIDS. Initially, the programme was initiated and promoted by UNESCO Headquarters in Paris which trained 21 countries in Africa. Assessment has indicated that Peer Health Education is one of the most reliable instruments in spreading knowledge and educating masses in a simple and entertaining manner. The Programme indicated that the multiplier effect is very high as a group of ten peer educators performing and imparting knowledge to a crowd are likely to reach over 100 people within an hour and that those 100 people have the potential to reach the wider community of about 1000 people within a day.

Learners and Teachers are Benefiting from the Programme.

Community Leadership Benefiting from the Programme

Peer Health Education aims at encouraging community groupings in schools, work places, villages and any human setting to initiate small groupings that are empowered with knowledge of how to pass on various messages related to HIV & AIDS. The tool is used as a crosscutting initiative that can also be used on any other subject apart from HIV & AIDS. For example, GCYDCA is working with the Network of Teacher Educators Responding to AIDS (NTERA) in Africa, to initiate Peer Health Education through the Learner Centered Approach in the teacher training colleges. So far, the coordinating NTERA office of Malawi has embarked on training NTERA Malawi, Tanzania and Namibia on Peer Health Education using lecturers as a means of spreading the strategy. Colleges are encouraged to use the strategy as a crosscutting tool across all subjects in order to ensure that every student graduates with Peer Health Education methodologies and programme management. Other countries such as Swaziland are using youth as Supper Buddies who concentrate on reaching fellow youth in schools and general communities where they use drama, speeches and debates as a way of spreading messages on HIV & AIDS. Ministries of Education in Zambia, Uganda, Kenya and Tanzania have partnered with various organizations such as FAWE in promoting Peer Health Education through their HIV & AIDS programmes.

As a way of standardizing Peer Health Education approach in Africa, GCYDCA is in the process of developing a training manual that will be available to all countries for adoption and localization. The training guide will cover theories and practices of Peer Health Education. The simplicity of the training manual will provide countries with the opportunity to adopt and modify it to suit the prevailing situations and requirements of various countries. Upon completion of the training manual, it will be followed by training of at least two members from each of the identified countries. The training manual is expected to be concluded in September this year.

GCYDCA is at its peak in operations as it is reaching out to various countries effectively and efficiently within its mandate. Partnership with the Australian Government has proven to be effective and beneficial to the wider African communities, more especially school communities. The Programme has already received overwhelming support from various Ministries of Education and organizations. It is hoped that the programme will finally go beyond HIV & AIDS mitigation and will be used by various sectors in promoting social and economic developments in their communities. In this matter, it can be concluded that Peer Health Education is a great tool in facilitating achievements of the Millennium Development Goals.

With the overarching theme titled "Educational Equity, Quality and Internationalization," issues such as the quality and equity of education and the imperatives of rural transformation were highlighted during the discussions. The Forum attempted to clarify the concept of rural education with a clear focus on the contribution of education to rural transformation in the context of global, regional and national challenges facing the 21st century and the need for building a learning society and learning communities. ◆ EIU Programme Monitoring Projects-Implementation of Monitoring (APCEIU)

In response to the strong recommendation from UNESCO's 2010 Evaluation on APCEIU's Activities for 2005-2009, APCEIU started to structure a proper device for monitoring performances by our alumni members. By measuring the quantity and quality of their post-programme activities we believe that efficiency, effectiveness, and accountability of our activities will be qualified and maintained.

The first basic survey has been conducted for two weeks in April 2011, focused on information on the status of the post-programme activities. Targeting the graduates of the four APCEIU training workshops (i.e. Asia-Pacific Training Workshop, Asia-Pacific Leadership Academy for School Principals, EIU Best Practices, and EIU Training Workshop for Korean Teachers), the questionnaire enquired on their implementation of their action plans that were drafted at the end of the workshops or developments of the best practices since winning award. Out of 138 responses (41%), over 90% of the respondents answered that they are continuing their EIU activities. Most of them underwent the process of localizing the EIU frame that had been acquired through trainings, workshops and materials provided by APCEIU.

Based on the data gathered from the first questionnaire, second survey is currently taking place. The second questionnaire focuses on the contents of performances, materials and pedagogical method used, and impact to learners, peers, and institutions. Indicators based on the data will be developed to periodically monitor the EIU status, process, and effect of EIU performance and material use.
